Dear Jonathan,
Thanks to your earlier helpful note I've read the pieces in the Guardian and the Independent.

A small flaw,, but one that I can't help but note because it leaps out of Bieler's text too, is the way that the defenders of the suspects gloss over the fact that because the student 'couldn't afford' the printing costs of what is alleged to be 1,500 pages, he sent it to the administrator of another school to print it for him, at their cost, without the school's permission. So that's an OK thing to do, not at all covert, dishonest or likely to provoke suspicion.

Disgraceful.
